7. Change Management Process

Any service request or change request client's prior approval will be received before handling the same. Espire have identified two types of changes that a typical request is likely to encounter during its execution:

- Design changes: Represent design modifications incorporated after the initial request approval. Espire identify such changes as natural developments, but also appreciate their existence. Emergence of such changes helps us locate the needs that have been overlooked before, thus helping us to enhance the perfection quotient of the project. We cater to these needs by getting your approval through the Change Request Process.
- Non-compliance changes: Represent the changes occurring from unanticipated environmental developments, or from failures in executing some pre-planned activities. Espire identify such changes to be detrimental for the project's progress and try best to avoid the same. Should going for a non-compliance change be inevitable, Espire opt for a Change Budget through submission of a Change Request to the client.

Once the design is signed off and approved, any changes to the design during Coding and Testing phases will be considered as change request and will be taken up following Espire's change request process. Any such change request will be analysed for impact and additional cost and effort to implement the same may need to be borne by Client.

Change Management process has two components to manage changes within the project environment:

- The Change Request Process
- The Change Approval Process

Change Request Process is designed to manage changes to the project goals, deliverables, timeline, or design specifications. A Change Request does not necessarily mean a monetary impact to Customers – that depends on the degree to which the scope is changed – however all changes, large and small, are made via the Change Request process. To prevent misunderstandings, other forms of communication by any party, including, but not limited to, verbal discussions, meeting minutes, written or electronic memorandums, and presentations do not constitute a proper Change Request.

Change Approval Process could be used to implement any permanent change in the scope of the overall program, or for any one-time or out-of-scope work associated with a specific project. Depending on the change or work to be performed, a Change Request may or may not result in a pricing adjustment or a single service charge. The Change Approval Process provides the mechanism to accept and formalize the change requests. Specific procedures associated with the Change Approval Process are triggered upon submission of a Change Request Form to the Espire

Project Manager. These could be fresh approvals for additional resources or funds, revisions to plans, schedules etc.
